

SONY ROLLY DANCING MUSIC PLAYER
($400; sonystyle.com)

The palm-size, egg-shaped Rolly gets its name from its ability to sprout flaps and roll and spin around to the music it plays through its stereo speakers. You can use the included software to choreograph its moves.

The 2 gigabyte Rolly can hold about 500 songs in AAC and MP3 formats, and the battery can power up to four hours of music and motion or five hours of music alone.

The sight of an egg break dancing on your coffee table while emitting its own 700-color techno light show may not be worth $400 to you, but fun, funky and functional don't always come cheap.

JABRA BT3010 BLUETOOTH HEADSET
($50; jabra.com)

You love the convenience of using your phone hands-free with your wireless headset. You hate looking like a tech geek while you do it. Jabra has come up with an option that still leaves you looking like a tech geek, but one with style.

At jabra.com/coverdesigner, you can design the cover of the BT3010 headset to match what you're wearing or to make some other statement. The site's tools help you; once you've finished, print out the design on glossy paper and trim it with a pen knife, such as an X-acto blade, or a box cutter (scissors can do in a pinch). Snap off the transparent cover and replace the current design with your own.

Blending fun and function

Remember the motorized mounted fish who twisted and sang his way into pop culture in 2000? It's about time we had another Big Mouth Billy Bass phenomenon.

Gadgets have a fun side, and that's OK with me, as I have a fun side too. The newsroom knows my impromptu "Motown moments," when I burst into songs from the '60s and '70s. Today, we look at a few devices ranging from $50 to five figures that also do the unexpected, putting the "fun" in "functional."

SEURA TV MIRROR
($2,800 to $28,000; Hydrology, 312-832-9000)

In high-end homes, luxury hotels and fancy restaurants, Seura TV mirrors add a new meaning to "You are what you watch." The TV is either encased in a mirror that measures 17 to 65 inches, or fits behind reflective glass. Make sure it faces a darker wall to prevent unwanted reflections.

ESPN The Ultimate Remote
($299; amazon.com)

This new universal remote connects to your home's Wi-Fi network to bring sports scores, news and other information from ESPN at the touch of a button. Sports information and TV channel lineups, as well as a mobile Web browser, are displayed on the remote's screen, so you can keep an eye on both
